A surveyor involved in the planning process will be concerned with the assessment and implementation of both the legal and procedural requirements of the planning application. However, the regulation of planning consents is often complex and confusing for practitioners who are not experts in the process. This guidance note will help the non-experienced surveyor to successfully handle planning applications by taking them through each stage; setting out RICS bestpractice; explaining both the legal and procedural requirements;and providing a checklist of useful information. This third edition includes coverage of all relevant statutory amendments, and reference to the powers of the Mayor of London.
